

Interactive comment on “Dust storms come to central and southwestern China, too: implications from a major dust event in Chongqing” by Q. Zhao et al.

The authors did not give any consideration on possible contamination associated with their samples. With the fact that their sampling sites were close to busy road and power plants, I hardly believe their ‘dust’ was the one transported from deserts. Therefore, the conclusions the authors derived were built on a weak foundation. Substantial revisions and justifications must be made to the current version of the manuscript before further consideration.
