Yes, I agree, this is not a scientific paper presenting my new research. This is just an Overview and Introduction article to this Special Issue and presenting the recently finalized EuMetChem COST Action. In the journal submission form there are just 2 suitable options: Review article or Technical note, so when submitted I clearly wrote the following in my Cover Letter (Information for the Co-Editor): "Dear Editors, this short article is a kind of introduction to this Special Issue "Coupled chemistry–meteorology modelling: status and relevance for numerical weather prediction, air quality and climate communities (SI of EuMetChem COST ES1004) (ACP/GMD inter-journal SI)" briefly presenting the COST Action ES1004 EuMetChem and its main achievements. This is the final contribution to this Special Issue (this is the reason why it is submitted in the last moment for closing the Special Issue. So, it could be considered as a Review article or Technical note. With best regards, Alexander Baklanov, the chair of the COST Action ES1004 EuMetChem."
